CHAIN DRILLS

PRINCIPLE OF FEED AND DIRECTIONS FOR USING

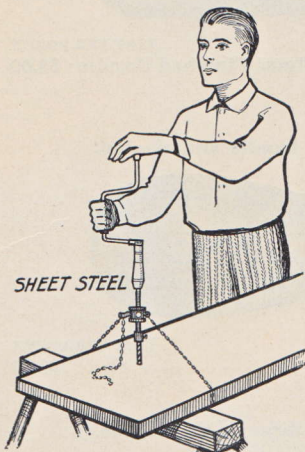

"Red Devil"

CHAIN DRILLS.

Principle of Feed.—The spindle G turns in the nut (or cylinder) H, and the latter in yoke 1. Each has a separate movement and will not turn together except under the chain pressure when applied. The brass friction plug and spiral spring under pressure of screw B, enforce a friction (or brake) or nut H, according to the degree screw B is turned down. Without the friction G and H turn together at same speed (when applied) and you have no feed. When a slight friction is applied by turning screw B, nut H is held back or stands still until spindle G has advanced and brought increased pressure on the chain sufficient to overcome the resistance. G and H now turn together, but H is running slower as the movement of H is entirely controlled by the chain pressure. G continues to advance and H is retarded at the same ratio, and gives you a perfectly uniform feed. Another turn of screw B repeats the process and gives you a stronger feed, and so on until you have obtained the maximum feed.

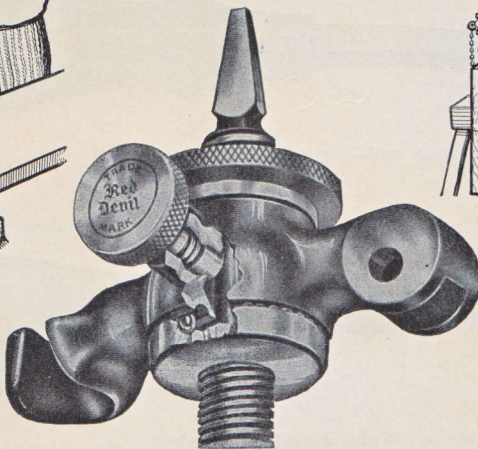

Directions.—See that Spindle G is back close to nut H, pass the chain around material to be drilled and hold as tight as convenient. Take up any slack in chain by holding wheel A and turning brace until drill enters center. Always start with screw B loose, and turn down gradually until you get the desired feed. If hole is to be located on or near edge of any material, loop chain around a board (placed under material) of sufficient length to throw chain an equal distance each side of the drill.

HIGH SPEED POWER HACK SAW BLADES

Important—These blades are milled to a very sharp point, and a very light pressure should be used in starting a new blade to work. 50 to 60 strokes per minute produces the best results. Greater speed than this dulls blade prematurely. All blades are made full length, from center to center of holes they run $\frac{1}{2}$ in. short.

THE U.S.R. BLADES

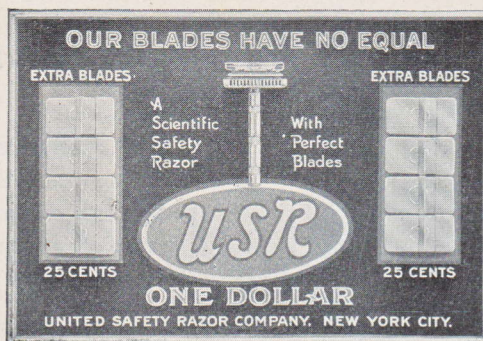

The U.S.R. Safety Razor has reached the highest point in safety razor efficiency with its thoroughness in shaving and its simplicity in adjustment.

The scientific construction of the frame insures the perfect shaving angle. The blade slides into the frame with its cutting edge resting lightly upon the comb just above the bevel and corrugations in the comb prevent the cutting edge from coming into contact with the frame.

The blade is automatically adjusted for clean shaving through a regulating device acting upon the rigid back of the blade which guides it to its place in the frame.

The blades are conveniently packed, first in envelopes and then in aluminum containers. Extra packages of blades are sold everywhere, five blades for twenty-five cents.

List per Dozen Packages.....$3.60

RAZORS

"RAN-TAN-KA-RUS" "RED DEVIL" RAZORS

Made by JOHN ENGSTROM, of Sweden.

No. 600. The peculiarity of this Razor is in the form of the blade, the construction being such that a man cannot use it without obtaining a drawing cut, thereby insuring ease in shaving. Note that the edge and back are both curved and parallel. The curved back insures a more even stropping than is possible with a straight back and curved cutting edge. Hamburg ground, full concaved.
